

Importance of the Group's Conviction

Group Conviction

Like-minded groups can have a dramatic impact upon the overall world-thought. The way this is accomplished, first and foremost, is for the individuals and the groupings to learn how to identify themselves in terms of their unlimited Nature, then to become accomplished in the, what we'll call, workings of their tools, their mechanisms, and to ultimately work together towards a common thought-form. And this must be (and here's the key) this must be without reservation.

In other words, the grouping as it gathers would be better to be of lesser number than to be weak in the strength of its conviction. For one of doubt or weakness or uncertainty weakens the whole lot. Just as the little leavens the lot. See? So it's important that you are unified, that you are consistent in your application, your belief, your dedication, and that you apply this in accordance with your known conviction of the Law and of your potential. And it goes without saying, we should think, that that conviction needs to be as firm, as hard, and as clear as possible.

— 19901205