

The Homeland

by Lama Sing March 17, 2014

The Homeland

The Homeland is that expression of pure Freedom that is known by the Children of God who have chosen to gather together to express their Freedom. The Freedom is borne in that which gives Life, called Father's Word. The essences from which they create, found in Father's Word, have been referred to as the "Colors of Creation." We have chosen this terminology because we know that the term color, or colors plural, invokes an understanding within those who hear it. But the Color that is found in Father's Word is the unending potential of Creation that is there for the choice of those who would seek it or seek to use this potential of Creation to bring beauty or joy to others.

In the collage of experiences which transpired at the onset of creation, many different pathways were created and uses of the Colors of Father's Word were applied. And, through the process, a variety of influences (which are clearly known in the Earth) became manifest, and the Colors were no longer Free. But because the Children of God are given the gift of this choice, the Colors conformed to their intent.

Those who saw this, and realized that the Freedom of Father's Word can never be bound, realized that the experience that they had been a part of was not real. It was and is an illusion, a dream, a choice of believing, a pathway manifest for experience ... it matters not what we or others might call this. The reality of it became subjective. And as one became ingratiated by their own creation and the creations of others, that reality was agreed upon. And, like the many travelers gathered together, this became the destination for this group, and others came and chose to be a part of it.

But in the truth of Knowing, even that which seems utterly real is simultaneously known to be transient. Those children of God who knew this, and know it, simply stopped participating in the dream, in the pathway of experience, and moved to that Consciousness that would grant those who were choosing the path of experience as it was to be Free to do so. And they continued creating, not unlike their brethren on the pathway of finiteness, but holding the same essence of Father's Word: unending Love, unlimited Compassion, Peace, and the joy of BEing and sharing in the Spirit of Father: which is Freedom.

Whether or not these beautiful Children of God who hold the Spirit of Father in such a loving way would be seen to be as a realm, or a level of consciousness, or a place of (quote) "BE-ing" (end quote) matters not. For what truly matters is the nature of their truth: They know who they are, they know what it is that they call forth to create, and they know that what they call forth is of Father and is Father celebrating with them the joy and wonder of these same potentials as those who walk the pathway of experience in finiteness; and yet, in the same moment as a joyful creation is experienced, the Love of it is so complete that it is Utterly Free.

So, as we look upon these Children of God, is their cup empty, ready to receive? Or, full, ready to give Let us look at this very simply. Their cup, after all, is a container. They are, in essence, the Completeness of both. They are filled to overflowing and, thus, giving this. And utterly open because there is nothing that they hold to limit, and so they are as the empty, pure cup of receptivity.

The Homeland is real. A part of it is within each of you.

If you seek to BE it, then you will need to look at what obscures it: Is there that which you cling to that occludes its presence? Is there that which you fear that is like a covering? Is there that which you covet which encases it in a shell? Is there that which you hold as a guilt which buries it deep within the sea of emotion?

Another can come along on your pathway in the journey of experience and reflect this to you. And you might pause and say, "Wait! What is this that I perceive? How might I have this, as you possess?" A traveller who has the Light of the Promise of God within would respond, "Put aside all that you have, and follow me." And you might remember that One who bears Father's Light having said this to a man of great wealth.

It is not complex. And, perhaps, therein lies the challenge or difficulty.

The Truth of who you are means that the Homeland is within you. And as you claim that as yours, no matter where you are or what you are about, you are as we Here, speaking to you — from the Homeland.